

making & sustaining organizational change

Substance use and mental health service providers are struggling with a reduction in resources and an increase in demand for services.

The NIATx Foundation can help implement changes using existing resources to better address these needs.

TREATMENT SAVES LIVES. NIATx SOLUTION SCIENCE SHOWS THE WAY.

NIATx has worked with over 3,400 organizations and numerous county and city governments across 47 states to improve systems of care. Through these projects, the NIATx Foundation has honed leading-edge practices and products to make—and sustain—impactful change.

The NIATx Model facilitates service design changes that improve providers' ability to effectively operate and meet new care challenges. We use the NIATx rapid-cycle change process to identify, test, and implement process changes. These are not changes to clinical practice, but changes to the operational processes and workflows that make up how the treatment program functions.

We are innovators—changing the way organizations across the country improve treatment systems through the same strategies other industries have used to successfully evolve.

CASE STUDY

To address the growing opioid epidemic, the APT Foundation, Inc. entered a nine-year study in July 2006 using the NIATx rapid-cycle model to improve treatment access and program outcomes. Since the initial study, APT has continued to use the NIATx model to sustain results and navigate current treatment challenges associated with COVID-19.

Based on data collected through routine quality assessment, this open-access model appears to improve treatment access, capacity, and financial sustainability without evidence of deleterious effects on treatment outcomes. In addition, APT has found the changes implemented to respond to COVID-19 have allowed the facility to continue providing treatment to patients and, in several cases, have improved treatment approaches, particularly for those with access disparities.
